walked down the street peacefully, intrigued by the way the moonlight stretched her shadow out onto the pavement. Suddenly, she heard a rustling in the bushes, she spun her head around, mildly relieved to find that nothing was there. But when she turned back, she was horrified to find 0 more shadows accompanying hers!

"Hi there, Anne.", says Sally in a sinister voice, "Won't you play with us?". Samantha snickers as she holds up the large roll of duct tape in her hand. A look of terror shoots across Anne's face, and she makes a desperate run for it. Unfortunately, she was never the athletic type, and the two girls grabbed her as she gasped for breath.

Due to the physical and emotional trauma, Anne fainted right in the arms of Samantha and Sally, which only made their plan so much easier. She woke up duct taped to a tree the next morning, her backpack was long gone, the girls were long gone. She hung there helplessly as a squirrel ran across her face, slipping on her tear stained cheek as he scurried up the tree, where he got a beautiful view of all the students, including Sally and Samantha, walking happily into school.

It's midway through the semester, and Janny is taking a math test. She has been struggling all semester in this class, and she knows that this test will form a big part of her grade. She feels like she is doing quite well on the test until she comes to the last problem. It is worth 20 points and she just can't remember how to solve it. As it happens, Jason, the math genius in her class, is sitting right in front of her and she can see he's just finished it. She is close enough to see how he solved it, and she knows that no teacher can see her if she cheats....

A war wages in her mind as she tries to find the best outcome of this stressful dilemma. Should she take the path of honesty and responsibility, or are these 20 points worth breaking the rules for? With ~~pe~~ each passing second, her indecisiveness becomes increasingly painful. At long last, she makes up her mind. Her bad side has taken control, there's no stopping her now. She looks around her and sees the coast is clear. Jason has fallen asleep on his desk, which means his paper is in plain sight for all to see. "It's too good to be true!" she thinks to herself. She widens her eyes, stretches out her neck, and in the blink of an eye, Jason's equation has been copied and pasted onto her paper.

Fast-forward a few days, the weekend has passed and Janny has had some valuable time to rethink her actions. Her initial feeling of accomplishment has slowly morphed into a terrible burden. The teacher reads out the grades for the whole class, and it turns out Janny got the highest score! As the teacher keeps reading, her classmates' suspicion grows substantially. Finally, the overwhelming guilt of her mistake has become too much to bear. "I cheated!". The whole class falls silent, silence then turning into gasps and murmurs. Janny felt she's ^{done} the right thing by confessing, but her act of honesty is no match for the consequences to come.

Anne had always been a shy and awkward girl. Her ^{hair} was always a mess, and she dressed like an elderly woman. Her classmates would constantly joke about her and call her names, but she didn't mind, she had become used to the life of an outcast.

Out of all her classmates though, Samantha and Sally were by far the worst. The mischief and torment seemed to go on forever with those two, and they seemed to genuinely enjoy every precious second of the torture. Anne, being the weirdo that she was, was an incredibly easy target.

One fateful night, as naive little Anne made her way back home, the terrible two had come up with a devious plan. Anne

One day in the morning, some girls tell me that I need to choose a side, either Mandy or them. Scared and sad, I still decide to stay with Mandy because if I leave her, she would be alone. Since that day, the other girls in the class have not talk to us. Both of me and Mandy feel lonely. We tell the situation to our homeroom teacher. And she promises us that she can solve the problem. The next day, she plays a video about bullying in the class. By the video, all of us understand how the person feel when he or she gets bullied. After that class, those girls come and apologize to us. They say that they really regret about what they have done to us. Hearing this, Mandy and I cry loudly and hug them. The fight finally comes to an end.

After this story, everyone in my class understand how to be friendly with each other. All of us are cherish to having each other as friends.

49 The devil and the angel in her mind are fighting. Should she cheat? Anxious and nervous, Janny can't decide what to do. However, when the devil in her mind is just about to win, she suddenly reminds what her mom told her before she went to school. "Hope you do your best on the test! No matter what the score is, remember that I'll always be proud of you. Break the legs!", her mom said with a warm smile. And this is the reason why the angel wins the battle. Janny eventually decides to be honest to herself. Believing that she can conquer this challenge, Janny takes a deep breathe and looks at the last problem thoroughly. Fortunately, an idea to solve the problem comes to her mind in the last few minutes. And she completes the test after all.

A few days after the test, the math teacher gives the test paper back to the students. Surprisingly, Janny turns out to have the highest score in the class. And Jason, in contrast, is the second place because he did the last problem wrong. What a surprise to Janny! She is so contented with herself that she didn't cheat on the test. It was what her mom had said that encouraged her to believe in herself. After this experience, Janny knows that there is no such a free lunch in the world. She will always be honest and confident to conquer every challenge in her life.

Currently studying in the elementary school, I am a second grade student. I love to go to school and have fun with every classmate in my class. However, there is a girl in my class called Mandy. For some reasons, some of my friends don't like her. They always tell me that her dress is ugly and that she gets bad grades. Knowing that such words are mean to her, I stay silent because I don't want to break our friendship. I try to keep the friendships on both sides. Sometimes I hang out with Mandy, and sometimes I go out with them. Nevertheless, things are not as easy as I thought.
